That’s a great idea and I wonder how often it is utilized by community organizers.

This is a very important step to working with groups we plan to assist/advocate for.

I think that is also important to remember that our personal safety is physical but also emotional, moral, etc. Sometimes being a SWer can be draining and we have to watch out for burnout, compassion fatigue, etc. I consider this a part of personal safety, too.

It’s so important to remember to do what you can and support others voices doing the rest.

How well do activists navigate systems and how safe is it. To consider personal safety, it is important to know how well the systems are navigated.
