Sarah Vote Nov 6 Blahovec @Sblahov

A1 Disabled folks are one in six voters, one in four American adults. We are usually called “the largest minority,” but this phrase ignores that marginalized groups are not discrete but intersecting. #MacroSW

Sarah Vote Nov 6 Blahovec @Sblahov

A1 cont’d: Every part of our lives are touched by policy. Education, employment, housing/transpo, healthcare, criminal justice reform, on and on. And this is especially true at the local levels, but voter turnout is lower in non-presidential years. #MacroSW

Sarah Vote Nov 6 Blahovec @Sblahov

A1 cont’d: It is imperative that disabled folks weigh in and be recognized as a voting bloc like other marginalized and underrepresented groups (that we may also be a part of). We need to build mainstream consciousness about our existence. #MacroSW

Sarah Vote Nov 6 Blahovec @Sblahov

A1 cont’d: people are starting to recognize that disabled people vote and care about what happens in government, but there are still ableist beliefs about whether we should participate. We need to shut those down. #MacroSW

Matthew L. Schwartz, MBA, LMSW ☐️ @TheMattSchwartz
A1 Because elections have "real" consequences on "real" lives, but on those who are marginalized the most. The Disability community is hugely impacted (in terms of services, rights, and access) based on the outcomes of elections, who's in office, and ballot measures #MacroSW

The voting process is inherently inaccessible, from registration through casting a ballot. @ACLU found that all but one state online voter reg site in 2014 were inaccessible.

A3 cont'd #MacroSW in 2012, two Rutgers profs Doug Kruse and Lisa Schur found that over 30% of disabled voters experienced a barrier, compared to only 8.4% nondisabled voters.

These barriers include: inaccessible voter reg and election websites/sample ballots; voter ID laws; barriers into polling places (parking issues, unclear signs, inaccessible buildings)...

A3 cont’d #MacroSW poll workers are biggest barrier, as they may not know how to interact with the accessible polling equipment or try to police who can vote based on perception of disability (illegal)

These challenges are now being compounded by a push to return to hand-marked paper ballots and away from accessible equipment due to security concerns.

Local disability advocates are working on addressing these issues in their local election systems, but a ton of work needs to be done locally and nationally for accessible elections.

Some people turn to mail-in as a more accessible system. For some folks it is, but for some with blindness/low vision/mobility issues, they may not be able to privately and independently vote via mail-in.

This is important...to ensure those with a disability who need assistance have autonomy in casting their vote. #macrosw
